

14 September, 2015

To whom it may concern,

As you may know, the demand for qualified Information Security talent far outweighs the supply. Driven by the seemingly endless uptick in data breaches, more and more companies are now faced with the difficult task of hiring skilled people to secure their products and services. Unfortunately, the lack of cyber curriculum and educational resources has led to an enormous deficit in trained and qualified applicants. The work of iForce seeks to fill this gap by integrating fundamental cyber security curriculum and certifications into the classroom. We've observed the successful results of their pilot programs and are excited for the future potential the organization provides.

With increased funding and school district support, iForce is in a unique position to provide diverse groups of students throughout the United States and beyond with exposure to skills necessary to pursue careers in Information Security. I highly recommend iForce receive such support.

Thank you,

Jennifer Henley
Director, Information Security Operations